

ABSTRACT

An electrical cable has a plurality of twisted pairs of conductors therein and a corrugated tape member that separates and maintains spacing of the twisted pairs from adjacent twisted pairs. The corrugated tape member is preferably formed of a dielectric material and the corrugation may be longitudinal or across the width of the tape member.